

Day 8

Conditions are absolutely superb at dawn. Sheet glass and non-stop six to eight. Hames, TC and P73 hit it first and do circle work until forced in by hunger. The waves are all time and Hames comments that this day provides the best left hand waves he has ever surfed.

BREAKFAST: Honey and lemon pancakes taste great there are complaints about the fact that the perfect surf is in full view from the table, making it difficult to settle over the food. Response "Don't eat".

After eating Nev and the four take the minivan south for about five kilometers to the next left hand point, the notoriously dangerous Landmine Beach. They pass a right hand reef and some beach breaks on the way, both of which show potential but being late morning, both are suffering from the onshore afternoon trades. On arrival at the intended destination they spy solid six foot clean tubes pouring along the end of a long reef into a picturesque white sand beach. It looks something similar to Turtles in West Java.
